According to internet research from studocu.com, "Values development is the art, process, or result of developing values for human dignity. Values are the bases of judging what attitudes and behavior are correct and desirable and what are not."

Moreover, values development to our young children is one challenging way to inculcate especially in the elementary grades in schools. It is everyone's concern to build values in a child aside from their home where they first learn their values.

Values can vary from person to person depending upon the upbringing and the environment where she/he grows. Values education are both parents' and schools' responsibility but schools as organized institutions ought to take lead in developing more what is in values that should be underscore.

Given the values developed among children in elementary years will be seen in their characters and attitudes. Academic performances will always speak of how important are values instilled among learners. Given the values developed as early in the elementary years, will also speak of performance in the academic subjects that would spell out importance in the future career of the learners.

The values development in elementary grade learners depends on what and how visions, motivations, skills, and attitudes, are taught and guided by the parents and teachers.

As values in competencies is a separate subject in Edukasyon sa Pagpapakatao (ESP) in the Department of Education, if integrated in all learning subjects will lead to wholesome personality of a child.
